PREFACE

By publishing these returns relating to the pensions of former monks, nuns and chantry priests, the Lincoln Record Society has made it possible to trace, from printed sources, all the stages in the payment of pensions to many ex-religious. It has continued the work of the late Canon C. W. Foster who edited the Lincolnshire part of Cardinal Pole's pension list of 1555-56 and of the late Geoffrey Baskerville who put into print similar returns from the diocese of Norwich. No diocese has fuller records relating to the ex-religious than Lincoln which was a see both large in area and richly endowed with monastic houses.

My thanks are due to the Lincoln Record Society for publishing these returns and especially to the editor, Miss Kathleen Major, whose help and advice, particularly with the identification of place-names, has at all times been most generously given. I should like to place on record my debt to the late Professor L. V. D. Owen who first drew my attention to the problems of the dissolution of monastic houses in Lincolnshire; to the President, Professor Sir Frank Stenton for his continuing encouragement and to Professor A. G. Dickens whose work on the Edwardian arrears of Augmentations payments has been most valuable. Dr. J. Conway Davies has placed at my disposal his expert knowledge of the Court of Augmentations, and Miss Joyce Godber of the Bedford County Record Office has helped me with identification of place-names. Finally, to the officials of the Public Record Office, who have produced these documents and helped me with many difficulties over a number of years, I owe a deep debt of gratitude.

NOTES

In most instances a full transcript of the returns has not been given as the repetition of common form would have been both tedious and unnecessary. I have usually given the first return in full and thereafter I have calendared the entries, including all relevant detail in the Augmentations lists and in the local enquiries. The full Latin text has been given in brackets, where any point of special interest or any difficulty made this desirable. Some abbreviations noted above have been used. Christian names, where they are in Latin in the documents, have been given in their modern English form, but surnames have always been spelled exactly as in the document. Place-names, of which a few, unfortunately, still remain unidentified, have been given throughout in their modern form with the sixteenth-century spelling following in brackets. In some instances, where the same sixteenth century form of a place-name has already appeared, I have not repeated it in a later document. I have, where I thought it necessary to add notes to the dating in the original document, given the date in the new style.

In the returns to Queen Mary's enquiry there are a few entries in which the status of an ex-religious who has received ecclesiastical preferment, is not clear. He may be described as rector of a parish which appears, from other sources, only to have a vicar or vice-versa ; in these places I have noted the discrepancy. I have left the Latin curatus where some uncertainty exists as to whether the ex-religious was an assistant or the holder of a cure.

INTRODUCTION

I

GENERAL BACKGROUND

Life in religious community was so outstanding a feature of medieval England that its disappearance between 1536 and 1540 seems to mark the end of the Middle Ages in this country more clearly than does almost any other political event or social change : the scattering of those formerly in religion is an epilogue to medieval ecclesiastical history. A high proportion of the ex-religious of the country were resident within the diocese of Lincoln both because of its size and because of the number of its religious houses. Although the Henrician rearrangement of dioceses took from Lincoln, in 1541, archdeaconries covering the counties of Northampton, Oxford and Rutland, the see still contained the counties of Lincoln, Leicester, Huntingdon, Bedford, Buckingham and the largest part of Hertfordshire, and as late as 1554 there were still some 472 pensioners¹ resident within this reduced diocese. Moreover, as the majority of those who had been in religion chose to settle near their former houses, it is not surprising that the diocese and in particular the archdeaconry of Lincoln should have large numbers of pensioners. 221 out of the 472 recorded in 1554 were resident within the archdeaconry of Lincoln.

At least during the earlier part of the period from 1540 to 1574 the economic situation was extremely difficult. The country was going through a period of inflation which was most acute between 1550 and 1552 and the rise in the cost of living in the late '40's and early '50's must have affected pensioners as it affected all sections of the community. Board and lodging which could be obtained for a shilling a week in 1542, had risen to almost three shillings a week some ten years later. F. C. Dietz² has described the retrenchment initiated by the government late in 1551 and throughout 1552 ; committees investigated finances, royal workmen were dismissed and the fleet was reduced. Commissioners were appointed to call in royal debts ; jewels, bell-metal and lead were sold and church plate confiscated. In the early summer of 1552 the treasuries were empty and in August of that year all government payments suspended. Professor A. G. Dickens has shown how the payment of pensions exceeding £10 per annum had been stopped as early as 25 March 1552 and that further prohibitions were made later in the same year.¹ It is not to be wondered at that, in these circumstances, pensions payments to ex-religious were suspended.

While it may well be argued that the pensions were inadequate compensation for the great Henrician act of expropriation, successive governments showed concern that the contractual obligations which had been entered into, should be honoured. Hence numerous demands for information were made and concern was expressed that pensioners should not be cheated or deprived by sale of their pensions. Neither was the concern wholly governmental for, on one occasion at least, local commissioners pleaded for mitigation of the hardship suffered by pensioners. The ex-religious were a tiny fraction of a community which was undergoing profound social and religious change: yet they were not completely ignored by the government even at times when those formerly in religion appeared to command little public sympathy. Leaving aside Mary's reign during which some official support for the religious was shown, former monks, nuns, friars and chantry priests, as representatives of the old order, were not generally popular: that they received some measure of justice is a tribute to the tolerance of Englishmen in the sixteenth century.

II

THE RETURNS

The documents calendared in this volume provide, in the main, information concerning the material state of the ex-religious, but from some returns we can glimpse something more of the way of life of a few individual pensioners. The present writer's attention was first drawn to this group of Exchequer returns by the work of the late Geoffrey Baskerville.² The returns, all in the Public Record Office, are in a class which is made up from the Ancient Miscellanea of the King's Remembrancer.³ Among the documents here used, two types may be distinguished: lists of pensions compiled in the court of Augmentations and lists, drawn up in the various counties of the diocese, sent to the court. To the former category belongs the series of 'pensions assigned to incumbents and other ministers of the late dissolved colleges and chantries' drawn up on 22 June 1548. The second act dissolving the chantries had been passed on 24 December 1547 and a commission to assign pensions was given to Sir Walter Mildmay, at that time a surveyor-general of the court of Augmentations, and to Robert Keylway on 20 June 1548. The lists are the warrants for the issue of letters patent under the seal of the court of Augmentations.¹ The lists provide the names of 226 such pensioners. To this category also belongs a paper book of the court of Augmentations dated 5 Ed. VI. Among lists of many other counties, there are schedules of those receiving pensions, annuities and corrodies from officials of the court in Huntingdonshire and Hertfordshire in this book which appears to have been compiled in part from the warrants mentioned above. The Miscellaneous Books of the Exchequer Augmentation Office up to number 255 are calendared in Letters and Papers of the reign of Henry VIII but very little is in print from numbers 256 to 262. These books are large folio volumes which contain records of payments of pensions and annuities made, it seems clear, by the court direct and not through its officers in the shires. They also contain the recompenses for loss of office paid to officers of the court, annuities granted by the Crown, records of the fees of officers, payments made on the authority of the king and by warrants from the chancellor and council of the court of Augmentations, as well as payments for livery, mostly coats, and to messengers.²

To the second category belong the return of the commissioners relating to Huntingdonshire of November 1552 and the fragmentary return from Leicestershire. The Lincolnshire return (E101 76/18) has attached to it a paper schedule of 24 pages which is, of course, a list compiled in the court itself. This schedule is closely followed by Cardinal Pole's pension list of 1555-6 and a comparison of the two documents shows that the mortality rate among ex-religious was low between 1551 and 1555. The government in September 1552 was concerned, to some extent, about the non-payment of pensions and also about sales of pensions, and therefore commissioners were charged to supply information on these points and to provide the names of pensioners who had died. There follows chronologically the very full return of 1554 which covered the whole diocese. Attached to the returns from each archdeaconry of the diocese is a letter from the dean and chapter of Lincoln in which is contained a copy of the royal mandate. On page 30 the seal en placard of the dean and chapter is well preserved. Finally among the Special Commissions of the Exchequer, are to be found returns concerning the state of the ex-religious made by two Elizabethan bishops of Lincoln, Nicholas Bullingham and Thomas Cooper.

This edition of the documents preserved in the Public Record Office will make it possible to trace, from printed sources, the full "pension career" of many ex-religious. The earliest references to those formerly in religion—one can hardly speak of them as ex-religious at that stage—are to be found in the “surrender lists” many of which have long been in print.¹ The original assignments of pensions taken from the Miscellaneous Books of the Augmentations Office are in print in Letters and Papers of the reign of Henry VIII and it seemed unnecessary therefore, to calendar the warrants for monastic pensions 28 to 31 Henry VIII.² Many of these warrants were examined and in all examined cases, the lists of those receiving pensions agreed with those in the Augmentations Books printed in Letters and Papers. Some years ago the late Canon C. W. Foster edited a list of pensions, dated 1555–6, of religious persons in the county of Lincoln.³ This return is in the Exchequer, King’s Remembrancer Miscellaneous Books, Book number 31.⁴ The appointment of ex-religious to benefices can be traced from C. W. Foster’s “Calendar of the Institutions to Benefices in the Diocese of Lincoln 1540–70” printed nearly 60 years ago.⁵ Already then, from documents in print, it has been possible to trace the religious pensioners of the diocese in the years 1536 to 1540 when they first became pensioners, and those in the county of Lincoln some twenty years later in 1555–6: this volume will enable the fate of a larger number of pensioners to be established in several intermediate years, 1548, 1552 and 1554 and also at a later date in 1569 and 1574.

III

THE COMMISSIONERS

The central government in the Tudor period seeking information on local problems normally relied upon local men to supply it. In its enquiries into pensions it would appear that there were few exceptions to this rule. The five commissioners appointed in 1552, Sir Francis Ayscough, Richard Cecil, William and Anthony Thorold and Laurence Ersby all probably had some connection with Lincolnshire. Robert Cecil was the surveyor of the court of Augmentations in the county.

Sir Francis Ayscough was certainly the best known. He held the office of High Sheriff of Lincolnshire in 1545, 1549 and 1554 and on his death in 1564 he was buried in the church of South Kelsey.⁶ William Thorold of Hough and Marston was also prominent in the county, being High Sheriff in 1558, while his son Anthony, later recorder of Lincoln and M.P. for Grantham, did not act.⁷ Of the Ersby family there is little record before the early years of the seventeenth century when the family was established at Somercotes.¹ In the event only the first two commissioners acted.²

In 1554 however, the Crown commanded the dean and chapter rather than local gentry to supply the required information. The work of collecting the information was undertaken within the separate archdeaconries of the diocese by the archdeacon's deputy. Richard Barbar, commissary and official of the Archdeaconries of Lincoln and Stow, later archdeacon of Leicester, conducted the enquiry for the archdeaconry of Lincoln in St. Peter's church in Eastgate. Whether the investigators were lay or ecclesiastical made little difference to the form of the enquiry, for both called the ex-religious before them to give testimony.

IV

THE PREFERMENT OF THE EX-RELIGIOUS

After 1555-6 it can safely be assumed that the numbers of the ex-religious were dwindling, but some lived on to the 1580's. In *Lincoln Episcopal Records*³ and The State of the Church in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I,⁴ both edited by C. W. Foster, several ex-religious are recorded holding livings as late as 1580 and cross references have been made in this volume to those who were incumbents during Bishop Cooper's tenure of the see of Lincoln.

A few returned to regular life in Mary's reign. Hugh Philipps of Ramsey was at Westminster from 1556 and Thomas Field from the same house may also have been there.⁵ A study of wills and of local sources such as parish registers, as well as of episcopal records still unprinted, would reveal more about the closing years of those formerly in religion but one can scarcely, from the nature of the evidence, write a full-length biography of any of these men and women.

Though sufficiently detailed evidence for individual studies is lacking, the ex-religious may still be studied as a group. As far as the men were concerned they were, in the main, absorbed into the church as seculars, but a special group they remained with special problems. Questions of preferment and of the payment of their pensions caused frequent difficulties. Pensions were granted in some cases for life, in others, for a term of years, while in others the intention was clearly stated that the payment was to terminate upon promotion by the Crown to a living of an equivalent or greater value. It is clearly demonstrable that many ex-religious did not relinquish their pensions upon preferment to benefices but these were promotions made by patrons, whether individuals or bodies corporate, other than the Crown. In one instance it would appear that an attempt had been made to draw a pension when the pensioner had been promoted to a living by the Crown. Anthony Langton sold his pension on 12 October, 1542. In December, some two months later, he had been preferred to the vicarage of Horbling and yet Ralph Bridges had probably drawn some of the pension. This state of affairs had not long continued however, for before October 1543, Bridges had sold it to Mr. Gowche, the receiver of the court of Augmentations in the county because he could not secure payment. Whether the receiver had drawn the pension is not fully clear, but the commissioners state the law clearly when they say that "he (Langton) was preferred of the said king's gift and promotion so as it should seem by his own confession that the payment of his said pension should then have ceased by that occasion".¹ It seems unlikely that many pensioners promoted to benefices by the Crown continued to enjoy their pensions.

The standard of living of the monastic and chantry pensioners depended firstly upon the size of the pension and secondly upon whether or not they secured preferment. Women of course, had no part in ecclesiastical preferment and it may be stated here that, on the whole, their pensions were inadequate to enable them to live in any degree of comfort. Of the 357 male pensioners on the 1554 list who were undoubtedly ex-monks, canons or chantry priests,² 184 had by that year obtained ecclesiastical promotion to 196 rectories, vicarages or curacies. There were six who each held two rectories and three who each held three livings in addition to their pensions. Moreover two chantry priests and a former monk were serving as private chaplains in large households. Over 52 per cent of the pensioners therefore, had received ecclesiastical preferment and were drawing emoluments additional to their pensions. The number of ex-religious who were beneficed was almost certainly higher than this, as those who had left religion in 1536 had been given "capacities", that is dispensations to become secular clergy, but no pension. Among the pensioners however, those who had been monks and canons were, judging by the 1554 returns, more successful than chantry priests in obtaining promotion for about 56 per cent. of the former as against 42 per cent. of the latter were beneficed.

A number of ex-religious held more than one pension. Some former monks had become chantry priests and a few had entered one or other of Henry VIII's collegiate foundations and in this way, after 1549, two pensions were possible. Within the diocese of Lincoln no fewer than 26 men held two pensions; Thomas Hornell had a pension of £6 13s. 4d. as former prior of Nocton Park, one of £4 16s. as a chantry priest and was vicar of Metherringham with £8 0s. 8d. per annum. On the other hand Roger Dalison with his pension of £50 as Dean of Thornton College, was rector of Laceby at £13 6s. 8d., vicar of Haxey at the same stipend and of Stondon at £2 per annum. His curate at Laceby was not overpaid at £1 6s. 8d. but he, as an ex-chantry priest, had a pension of £6 13s. 4d.

V

THE ECONOMIC POSITION OF THE EX-RELIGIOUS

The securing of promotion or a second pension is however, the less important factor in assessing the standard of living of the dispossessed religious. The basic pensions, which mattered most, varied enormously: some pensioners were wealthy, others were poor, the majority comfortable. If £5 per annum was a reasonable sum upon which a person in retirement might live, then most of the men were on or above that minimum.¹ The adequacy of this figure has been challenged by Professor A. G. Dickens who cites Latimer's view that, in 1549, £8 to £9 6s. 8d. was an insufficient living for a vicar.² Although it is difficult to arrive at firm conclusions on the relative cost of living, I am inclined to think that £5 is adequate if not rather high for the years before 1545. The pension moreover was designed to provide a living for someone in retirement not for someone whose office entailed financial obligations. It is undeniable that those who were receiving pensions of £2 or under would be living in penury and approximately 6 per cent. of the men and 60 per cent. of the women fell into this pension group. Those with over £2 but under £5 of whom there were almost 27 per cent. of the men and 28 per cent. of the women, would not have been in any way affluent even before the rampant inflation of the late '40's. After 1549, they must have suffered considerable hardship if they had nothing but their pensions. In the pension group ranging from £5 to £6 13s. 4d. per annum, pensioners, even without additional income, would have been in comfortable circumstances until the inflation. Nearly 55 per cent. of the men fell within this group while only 6 per cent. of the women achieved it. A small number, less than 5 per cent. of the men and 4 per cent. of the women, fell into the range from £6 13s. 4d. to £9 19s. 11d., while more men (7 per cent.) and fewer women (2 per cent.) had £10 or over but under £20. Among heads of houses there were 12 men (about 3 per cent. of the total male religious on the list) and one woman whose pensions were £20 or over. The highest pension drawn in 1554 by a resident within the diocese, was one of £200 paid to the former abbot of St. Mary de Pratis, Leicester, who also held the living of Church Langton worth £60 per annum.

The really significant figure in establishing the standards which a former monk or chantry priest might enjoy, is that of his combined income. Keeping the same income ranges, we find on looking through the 1554 list, that only just over 1 per cent. of the male pensioners fell within the lowest income group. In the range from over £2 to under £5 the percentage almost reaches fifteen. In the next income group, although the numbers are still the largest, they form only 29½ per cent. of the total of men formerly in religion. Those in very comfortable circumstances with over £6 13s. 4d. but under £10 per annum, amount to 14½ per cent. The most striking increase however, taking the combined pension and stipend, is among those with over £10 but under £20. Nearly 29 per cent. of the male pensioners fall into this group. The ranks of the wealthy form 11 per cent., for there are 39 men with incomes of £20 per annum or over. There is little wonder that historians have long ceased to sympathize with Gasquet's laments on the pitiful state of the ex-religious.¹ Although these pensions suffered deductions for clerical subsidies,² and despite the inflation, it cannot be any longer assumed that they were grossly inadequate.

Some controversy has arisen over the payment of pensions. As has been stated earlier, payments fell into arrears in the 1550's, and on the strength of this, Gasquet made somewhat wild accusations on the payment of monastic pensions. Richard Bentley, former abbot of Welbeck may have been "unheard of" in 1552,³ but he appeared personally before the archdeacon's deputy in 1554. The main point to note however, is the regularity with which pensions were paid. There seems little doubt that, until 1551, pensions were paid regularly and it is surely unfair to fasten charges of ill-faith in the payment of pensions upon a government in the middle of a grave economic crisis. All had to suffer "cuts" and the ex-religious were no exception: considering the record of medieval and of later governments in making payments, that of Edward VI in the payment of pensions during the years under discussion was fairly good.

Full information on the position of pensions for the whole diocese is not available as the 1552 returns do not cover the whole area.⁴ In the returns for the county of Lincoln are recorded the names of 40 pensioners who, it is alleged, have died. Of these John Melleford, William Parre, John Meres, William Tofte, Richard Gedney, William Rooper, John Browne, Henry Norton and Roger Reynoldson reappear—on Cardinal Pole's list of 1555-6.⁵ Either the 1555-6 list was carelessly drawn up or someone had been drawing pensions illegally for a number of years. In 1552 William Ro(o)per had been dead, it was affirmed, for 12 years; why then did he appear on a pension list in 1555-6? Most of the others are said to have died in 1551 or 1552. The main importance of the 1552 returns however, is to be found in the evidence they provide of non-payment at this difficult time. The vast majority of pensioners had been unpaid for over a year. In most instances it would appear that payment had been made at Michaelmas 1551 but no payment, for payments were usually made half-yearly, had been made at the following Spring quarter day. A few had been paid in full but it is difficult to assign any reason for their good fortune, and against that, some had not been paid since the Spring of 1551. The commissioners' plea that something might be done for the poorer pensioners and that the receivers should be prevented from taking unjust exactions,¹ probably fell on deaf ears, for Mary's letter of March 1554 makes it quite obvious that payments were still badly in arrears. Nine pensioners had sold their pensions, in some instances for a mere pittance. No general charge of non-payment of pensions can be brought against the government and, although Mary's government advised against the grant of any new annuities of pensions and was undoubtedly pursuing a policy of retrenchment in 1553 and 1554,² there seems no evidence to suggest that, from 1554 onwards, pensions were not regularly paid. Moreover payments were still being made to ex-religious as late as 1569 and 1575.³ We can sum up the position, confident that few of the men who had been in religion suffered hardship, although such a judgment upon the circumstances of women can be made with less certainty.

VI

THE MARRIAGE OF THE EX-RELIGIOUS

An analysis of the various lists printed in this volume tells us something more than the value of the pension allotted to the ex-religious. The returns of 1554, which in some respects are the most informative, give a precise record of the marital status of the ex-religious. In that year there were within the diocese some 160 former monks and canons, 38 men who had been in collegiate churches and hospitals, 101 women religious and 159 ex-chantry priests⁴ all receiving pensions.⁵ Of these, 27 monks and canons, 5 collegiate clergy, 19 nuns and 17 chantry priests were expressly stated to be married. Marriage had been legal since the Spring of 1549¹ and within five years, about 17 per cent. of the monks, 13 per cent. of the collegiate clergy, 19 per cent. of the nuns and nearly 10 per cent. of the chantry priests had married. It is not certain however, that these were the total numbers of those who had married, for the returns clearly distinguish between those "not married" and those "never married". Some 129 men and 37 women are stated never to have married while 179 men and 39 women are said to be unmarried. It is unlikely, despite the fact that disciplinary action had been taken in the six months before April 1554, that the 218 unmarried had been separated from their spouses since Mary's accession. We cannot therefore, assert that the 218 should be added to the 68 said to be married, thus raising the total to 286. In all probability the term "not married" was the equivalent of "never married" especially as the returns from the Archdeaconry of Bedford always use the latter expression while those from the Archdeaconry of Huntingdon always employ the former. In the Archdeaconry of Lincoln however, there is no standard practice in this respect and, both terms being used, it is reasonable to suppose that some distinction is implied. It may be therefore that the number of 68 should be increased somewhat by the addition of those who, though not married at the time of the enquiry, had been. Clearly 36 per cent. of the former monks, nuns and chantry priests had never been married and in all probability that proportion should approach 84 per cent.

⁴ Some choral vicars are included in this number. These figures do not add to 472 because some on the 1554 list were corrodians.

To attempt to break down into groups those who married might lead to interesting speculation but would probably be statistically unsound. It would appear that few heads of houses married. The prioresses of Legbourne and Gokewell—both Cistercian houses—and the abbots of Great Missenden and Titley alone were married. Sixhills, a Gilbertine house had been the religious home of no fewer than five subsequently married nuns and Ramsey of three former monks who entered the state of matrimony. Two members of Dunstable, Ashridge and Bardney and of Irford and Bullington were married. Joan Astley of Sempringham had married Christopher Hudson a former canon of Catley. Neither of them appeared in person at the enquiry; they probably thought it more politic to stay away.

VII

RESIDENCE AND OCCUPATIONS OF THE EX-RELIGIOUS

In addition to marital status, the returns tell us something of the personal problems of the ex-religious. The question of residence is an important one. At least 57 were living where they had been in the cloister or where they had served a chantry, and there were few who had come into the diocese from a distance. Robert Blacwall from Worcester, Thomas Elkyns from Dorset, Robert Shilton, John Scott and Thomas Gurnart from Durham, Anna Aleyne and Sybel Newdigate from London and others had come into the diocese but what had caused them to settle within it, is not known. It may have been that some of them were natives of the counties comprising the diocese. Many moved only a few miles from the place where they had been in religion. A few almost certainly joined together to share the burdens of housekeeping in their compulsory exile from the religious life. Denis Maurison was rector of Noseley (Leics.) and his curate John Yeston was a former canon of the college there, and perhaps it is not fanciful to assume that two of their former colleagues, Denis Spenlove and William Busworthe also resident in Noseley, lived with them. Thomas Wilson, a prebendary of Thornton college was rector of Muston and his curate was a former canon, Edward Ednam. George Curson, a former canon of Merton had the sub-prior John Debnam living with him in the rectory at Taplow. Margaret Odell and Isabella Lanikyne, both of Chicksand, were living it is fair to assume together, in Henlow, as were Alice Clarke and Margaret Granger in Campton. Poor Cecilia Steward formerly of Fosse was too decrepit to attend the commissioners' enquiry but she was living at Torksey with Grace Wyse formerly a nun of the house there. Both had pensions of 16s. 8d. per annum and doubtless Grace was looking after the ailing nun. Some women pensioners were helped by their relatives as was Alice Coventrie whose brother Richard, a clerk, looked after her.

On the lists of pensioners there were some laymen, corrodians, annuitants, lay servants and some officials of the court of Augmentations but it appears that some had ceased to regard themselves as clerks. John Taylor of Castle Donington and Roger Askough of Louth, the former being described as "ipodidasculus" (teacher), the latter as a schoolmaster with a stipend of £10 per annum may have been instances of this. In Roger Askough's case the dissolution involved him in no change of occupation for he had been a teacher previously.¹ Joan Dean, formerly of Sion abbey, became a governess in Sir George Gifford's household. William East, a former gild priest, worked as a weaver and John Brampston as a tanner. John Langton, formerly of Bardney, and Robert Shipley of Mountgrace are each called "yeoman", while Miles Gill of Thorpe Tilney, a former canon of Chicksand, is decribed as "a husbandman although he is a priest".

It may seem that the present writer's interest in the ex-religious is primarily economic, but the nature of the documents themselves inevitably brings into greater prominence this aspect of their life.

It should not be inferred however that, because many of the ex-religious felt little financial hardship, they felt no grief at being compelled to leave the religious life to which many, no doubt, were devotedly attached. This aspect of their suffering has left few records that can be of use to the historian, for ordinary men and women of the mid-sixteenth century rarely expressed their innermost thoughts in lengthy correspondence, or, if they did, their letters are no longer extant.
